Israel's Demise

Almost eighty years ago, with hubris, while quoting from their holy books in an attempt to justify their seizure of lands and their antagonistic behaviour towards their neighbours, Zionists created the new State of Israel, which turned out to be a fragile entity with a foundation of fairy tales, fictional characters, outright lies, and deceit. Northrop Frye prophesised, decades shall pass and Israel will rise, grow, and prosper until it hits a final apex; and then, like a house of cards in a changing wind, Israel will collapse and crumble, ultimately to be absorbed by its Arab neighbours.

Northrop Frye and another professor, Thomas Harpur, were teaching the Bible to undergraduate students at the University of Toronto. Harpur, taught a literal interpretation of these books while Frye taught the Bible as literature, as a fictional history of Jews and Christians. As silly as this may seem today, at that time, this was very dangerous talk; by Canadian laws, Frye risked being arrested and imprisoned for questioning the veracity of the Bible.

Although their teachings were opposed, there was no animosity between Frye and Harpur. However, dissent became apparent in the student population, especially for the students who were studying under both professors. Frye gave much evidence and proof of the veracity of his lectures, while Harpur could give no evidence of the truthfulness of what he was teaching. For any students with doubts, Harpur advised, they should trust in the Lord to strengthen their faith. Some students complained to Frye that Harpur, by asking for blind faith, was asking them to close their eyes so they could see better. At least one student facetiously asked Harpur if he should park his brain at the door when he entered the classroom.

For decades, Harpur did not waiver on his teachings. In time, as attitudes and laws against blasphemy relaxed, Harpur began to admit to his own reservations. "Keep the populace uneducated, ignorant and stupid as a method of controlling them." Harpur remembered these words along with Edward Gibbon's statement, "Religion is regarded by the common people as true, by the wise as false, and by rulers as useful." It became obvious, Harpur's faith was showing signs of fraying.

Harpur had not been properly educated, he had never learned how to think; instead, he learned how to gobble up information and regurgitate it. This is how he earned several university degrees and his ordination as an Anglican priest. The only time Harpur had to think on an exam was when he began to examine himself.

Harpur wrote and published a book, The Pagan Christ, which details his journey into enlightenment as he began delving into what Frye had been telling him.

Like Frye, Harpur came to realise, all the justifications for creating the State of Israel are false. There was no enslavement of Jews in Egypt, there was no Exodus, there was no parting of the Red Sea, there was no Moses, there was no flaming bush, there were no commandments, there were no wanderings in the desert, there was no manna from heaven, there are no chosen people, and there was no promise of land. Plainly stated, there has never been any gods and there has never been any legitimate justification for Jews to occupy Palestine.

Israel's Demise

Many scholars are now in agreement with Frye. Many believe that the false foundations of Israel are disintegrating and are about to collapse. Some are predicting that a New Age of Reason which has no room for religion is just on the horizon.

Others fear that Israel will make every effort to bring the whole world down with them as they smash into the abyss. I have faith in the goodness of common folks who are just beginning to wake up from a very long sleep. Once the populace begins to think, to plan their own destinies, and run their own lives, they will no longer be slaves governed by fear. They will no longer be slaves to their religion.

Religion teaches man to be a slave to one or more gods through their earthly representatives. Reason teaches individuals to depend upon themselves, to work with hand and brain, and to overcome difficulties and obstructions by thinking and acting and not by praying. This is the path to maturity, and mature people do not fight. This is why the advent of a New Age of Reason can have only one result; it will lead into an age of peace and goodwill towards all men. There will no longer be any reason to fight. We will all be the same; all children of the Universe.

By the way; there is no Santa Claus, no Easter Bunny, no Tooth Fairy, no witches, no wizards, and Harry Potter is a fictional character. This is all verifiable.
